Local lawyer achieves Certified Specialist designation

Montréal, QC: Anna M. Di Stasio has been granted the Certified Specialist designation in Citizenship and Immigration Law by the Law Society of Upper Canada. Anna M. Di Stasio has been practising law for 10 years, primarily in the areas of business immigration.

The Law Society's Certified Specialist Program assists members of the public and the profession to identify lawyers who have met established standards of experience and knowledge in certain fields of law and who have maintained a high standard of professional practice. For more information about the Law Society's Specialist Certification Program, visit their web site at: http://rc.lsuc.on.ca/jsp/csp/index.jsp

To qualify for the Certified Specialist designation, a lawyer must have practiced for at least seven years prior to the date of his or her application for certification and at least five years in Citizenship and Immigration Law, and comply with the specific practice concentration and experience requirements. In addition, the lawyer must comply with the professional development and professional practice requirements to achieve and maintain certification.
